- Lovat Winogradsky was born on 25th December 1906 in Tokmak, a small village near the city of Odessa, close to the Black Sea in Crimea. His parents were called Golda and Isaac. They met whilst they were touring Ukraine as singers.
- In 1912 Isaac decided that it was safer for the Winogradsky's to immigrate to England rather than stay in Russia, where Jewish families like them were being persecuted at the time. Isaac went ahead of the rest of the family, to prepare for Golda, Lovat and his younger brother, Boris, to follow three months later.
- On arrival at Tilbury Docks in the UK, the officials, who would often change the names of immigrants to that of names they found easier to pronounce, decided that Lovat would become Louis and Boris would hence forth be known as Barnet. Oddly enough, the more difficult sounding Winogradsky (the literal translation of which is 'the town where wine is made') remained unchanged.

- The Winogradsky's first home was in Brick Lane in the East End of London, an area where many other immigrant families settled on arrival. Although his parents had left Russia with a reasonable amount of money, they had lost a lot of it due to gambling and so had to work a range of jobs to support the family . However, he and Golda found that there was still a demand for their particular brand of entertainment and would often perform on stage at the Mile End Pavilion, where they would sing songs from the 'old home' for the largely immigrant audience.
- In 1914, at around the time that World War 1 broke out, the family moved to the Bethnal Green / Shoreditch area and into a block on what was then known as The Boundary Estate. However, in 1917 the family (which now included baby brother Leslie) were evacuated following a German air-raid, and moved to Reigate. Louis was a promising student and by the time he was twelve he found himself in the highest class in the school thanks to his photographic memory -as well as a superb understanding of maths.
